Why your festival date may differ from India

Hindu festivals follow the tithi (lunar day), not the calendar date. A tithi begins and ends at the same moment everywhere in the world, but that moment falls on different local times and dates in different countries. Each festival also has its own rule: some are observed on the day the tithi prevails at sunrise, others in the evening (Pradosh), at midnight, or at moonrise.

> Example: Diwali 2027. Amavasya begins on 28 October at 8:51 pm India time and ends on 29 October at 7:06 pm. In India, Amavasya is present during the evening puja time only on 29 October. In New York, London and Dubai, the evening of 28 October already falls in Amavasya, while on 29 October it has ended. So Lakshmi Puja is on 28 October there.

How to read the tables: each region page lists the local date for every festival next to the date in India. Highlighted cells are dates that differ from India.

Rules used (as in standard North Indian Panchangs): sunrise tithi for Navratri, Ugadi, Hanuman Jayanti, Guru Purnima and Ekadashi; midday for Ram Navami and Ganesh Chaturthi; afternoon for Dussehra, Bhai Dooj and Raksha Bandhan (avoiding Bhadra); evening (Pradosh) for Holika Dahan, Dhanteras, Diwali and Sharad Purnima; midnight for Maha Shivaratri and Janmashtami; moonrise for Karwa Chauth; sunset for Chhath.

Many diaspora families and temples follow India's dates or their own community calendar. Janmashtami may be observed a day later by Vaishnava traditions (such as ISKCON). Please confirm with your local temple or priest for important rituals.
